A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.

Immense Quantities of Tin Cre on the Shores of Lake Superior.

Result of the Most Recent Exploration-Specimens Submitted for Assay-A Yield of Twenty-eight to Thirty-three Per Cent of Good Metal.

To the discovery of mineral deposits on the shores and beneath the bed of Lake Superior there seems to be no end. The extraordinarily rich mines of native copper of that region have attracted the attention of the world, while its mountains of un-surpassed iron ore are nearly as widely known. have been found and profitably worked on the north shore, near Thunder Bay, while other deposits of the same metal have just been discovered on the Iron River, in the vicinity of the Porcupine Mountains, on the south coast. Reports of gold discoveries in the immediate vicinity of the lake, at various points about its westerly end, reach us, with every evidence of credibility.

But more valuable far than all these is the recent discovery of tin ore in the same prolific quantities and richness that characterize all the deposits of that wonderful country. This discovery, the latest and as yet the least developed of any of the mineral discoveries of the region, promises to be the most important and valuable because of the scarcity of the metal on this Continent and its universal use in this age of the world. There have been several slight traces of tin ore found in various localities in the United States and Mexico; but none of them have developed the metal in sufficient quantities to repay the cost of mining. Some years ago the United States government, realizing the value and amportance of this metal, effered a reward of $100,000 for its discovery in quantities sufficient to justify its mining, and the Canadian authorities also offered a liberal reward for the same object. without accomplishing the desired purpose, were subsequently withdrawn. Now American enterprise and energy have brought to light what these targe rewards failed to disclose. The deposits which have been so recently discovered are virtually inexhaustible, and according to the analy-ses of the ores that have been made are, like the other metallic deposits of the Lake Superior region, of unexampled richness.

A few years ago a vein of virgin silver was discovered on a nearly submerged islet, just off the entrance to Thunder Bay, on the north shore of the lake. This discovery was followed by the formation of a company, with ample capital, that is now working at that point one of the most sucstimulated the zeal of explorers, with whom th whole north shore was soon covered. These en-terprising searchers after hidden wealth soon unearthed other beds of silver along the coast in the vicinity of Thunder Bay and 100 miles back in the interior, in the region of Shebandowan Lake, brought to light promising beds of quartz richly studded with gold. This discovery has remained in abeyance until the present time, it is alleged, because of a dispute between the Provinces of Ontario and Maniteba as to the ownership of the soil, and the consequent inability of the discoverers to obtain patents for the land. But the adventurous exploring parties that pushed out in other directions from Ihunder Bay were equally successful in their discoveries, and more so in their ability to secure title to the lands. One of these parties, following the coast down to the southeastward, in the vicinity of otter Head, on the main land, north of Michipicoten island, came upon a series of well defined veins of nimeral deposits, cutting through the lotty chirls that the that coast, and losing themselves in the fathonieus depths of the lake. These weins yielded an exceedingly hard, dark and heavy one than was unknown to the explorers, but was unposed to be iron. Specimens were secured for assay, but when tested for iron failed to yield that metal. Traces, more or less, of copper and silver were found in some of the specimens, and some did yield a fair show of iron, but not a sufficient percentage to account for the high specific gravity of the ore. The assayers to whom the specimens were submitted were either wholly unacquainted with tin, or else because, that metal was so completely unknown on this Continent, they failed to mage the same time to test for it; and so the value in abeyance until the present time, it is alleged, pletely unknown on this Continent, they failed to suspect its presence, and therefore made no tests for it; and so the value of the discovery was for a long time unknown. Some assays that were made of the product of these veins did produce a white metal which, as sliver was the metal sought, was taken for silver without much serviny. But later and more thorough and more scientific analyses, made by Professor Williams, of the Missouri School of Mines, at Rolla, Mo.; by Dr. Aug. F. Jennings, chemist and assayer of the Letroit Mineralogical, Mining and Assaying Association, and by Dr. Torrey, of the United States Assay Office in this city, establish the pressence of tin in prolide quantities. Dr. Torrey Says:—

Dr. Jennings analyzed a great number of speci-mens, producing an aggregate average yield of 28.7 per cent of metallic tin. Some of his speci-mens yielded as high as 57.7. In reporting his analysis he says:—

Dr. Jennings analyzed a great number of specimens, producing an aggregate average yield of 23.7 per cent of metalic tin. Some of his specimens vielded as high as 57.7. In reporting his analysis he says:—

The crose examined are free from any injurious minstrais, and especially wolframite, which is often associated with tin ores, and whenever present always depreciates the value of the mining properly and product.
The specific gravity of wolframite so closely approximeasure and the second of the mining properly and product.
The specific gravity of wolframites of closely approximeasure and the second of the second of the that the metal broduced from these ores cannot be excelled as regards its parity nor in the cost of working.

The location of this wonderful and most timely discovery, as already intimated, is on the north shore of the lake, in the province of Ontario. The precise point is about midway between the Sault St. Mary Canal and Thunder Bay, immediately opposite Michipicoten Island. The coast in this locality is high, tocky and barren. Cliffs of solid granite rise from the bosom of the lake to an altitude of 1,000 feet, their tops covered with a sparse growth of fir and ceedar. This rock-bound coust is broken by an occasional ravine, through which some wid mountain streams find a precipitous course to the grand receiving reservoir. The mounts of these streams are usually broad and deep, furnishing secure and beautiful harbors, with sufficient borders of lowland for commercial purposes. These lowlands are covered with evergreens and white birch. A few stray Chippewa indians wander through the forests back of the lake in that vientity, and subsist by trapping otter and beaver, the furs of which they sell to occasional traders along the coast. Bears, woives and deer abound also in the woods, and abundance of water fowl and fish of the finest quality are always to be found in the lake and estuaries. The region is really a whiderness, presenting all the features of natural grandeu

Con oner Young yesterday morning was notified to hold an inquest on board the steamboat Seawa paka, lyl, ng at pler 24, East River, over the remains of Patrick. Gunn, a laborer employed on the boat, who, late on Saturcay night, while intoxicated, feu overboard and was drowned. The body was recovered by Others Grimn and Crawford, of the second precinct, assisted by the deck hands. Gunn was twenty-eight years of age, and born in Ireland.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Beautiful Young Lady Burned to Death in Yorkville—Her Brother In-jured in the Attempt to Save Her Life— The Grief of Her Friends. Yesterday morning, about seven o'clock, a sad and painful accident occurred in Yorkville, which resulted in the death of one of the victims, a beautitul and accomplished young lady of about twenty-two years of age.

The young lady who lost her life was a Miss

The young lady who lost her life was a Miss Elizabeth L. McGuinness, residing at 1,568 Third avenue. It appears that she was in the act of kindling a fire in a stove, for the purpose of preparing breakfast for the family, when her clothing caught fire from the grate. Owing to the inflammable nature of her apparel the flames spread rapidly about her person, burning her entire body, with the exception of her head and face. Her SCREAMS FOR HELF brought her brother and father to her assistance, who did everything in their power to put out the fire that was literally consuming her body, but all their efforts to save her were of no avail, the fire had done its work, and she lingered until four o'clock in the afternoon, when death put an end to der sufferings.

had done its work, and she lingered until four o'clock in the alternoon, when death put an end to der sufferings.

Her brother stated that he was lying in bed in the next room to that in which the accident occurred, and, hearing his sister's screams, ran into the apartment, and there a sight met his gaze which almost paralyzed him. He tried to put out the flames with his hands, but did not succeed. He then ran back to his room and procured a b'anket, which he quickly wrapped around the body of his sister. By this means he succeeded in Petting out the then the sufferer. They did all that science and medicine could do, but they were unable to save her life. Miss McGuinness was conscious up to the moment of her death. Her sufferings were terrible. The members of the lamily and her friends stood by her bedside, trying all in their power to alleviate her agony, but all to no purpose. The neighbors speak very highly of her. They say that she was a young lady of High Accomplishments, who had tried to save her life, was terribly burned about the hands. He was in bed last evening when the reporter called, and his sufferings with the loss of his sister and the pain of his burns were intense. While he was speaking he was painfully affected. Tears ran down his cheeks. He said, "I don't mind the pain that the burns give me. It is the loss of my dear sister that gives me the most agony. Ehe was the best girl that ever lived."

The PATHER of the young man sat by the bedside of his son trying to calm him, but his agony was too heavy, and he refused to be comforted.

The rost of the family, consisting of two other brothers, were terribly affected, and though they are strong men, they could not stay the tears that conrect down their cheeks.

This sad accident has cast a deep gloom over a once happy household, and it will take years to remove it, if it ever can be removed.

The Coroner was notified, and will probably hold an inquest to-morrow.

ARKANSAS' DEFEATED CIVIL RIGHTS.

LITTLE ROOK, Feb. 17, 1873. The defeat of the important move on the part of the colored members of the Legislature has already been telegraphed you. On Friday, February 7, Mr Dawson, a colored member of the State Senate, managed to get a civil rights bill through that body. The bill provided that the colored people should have equal accommodations with the white on steamboats and cars, &c.; that they should not be refused accommodation at any hotel, drink at any bar nor meals at any eating house; that the colored children should be admitted to the same schools as the white children, and various minor details. The penalties were fixed at $500 for each offence, one-half to go to the State and the other to the individual aggrieved. On Monday, the 10th, the bill came up on its third reading in the House and the week was spent in debates pro and con, and at last was, on Friday, the 14th, voted upon. Some of the colored members became eloquent in defence of the bill, and Copeland, one of their number, made a telling speech. Evidently unexpectedly to the colored gentlemen many of the prominent republicans opposed the bil, basing their arguments principally on the fact that it was unconstitutional for a legis-lative body to legislate what any man should do lative body to legislate what any man should do with his private property—i.e., hotels, restaurants, &c.—inasmuch as they, having paid for licenses, had complied with all the requirements of the law. They also said that they saw no reason that the chidren should be mingled, as the blacks had already as good schools as the whites, and what more could be desired? One of them said also that he objected to one-half the penalty going to the person aggreeved, saying that under this clause a man might make it very profitable to go abous getting aggrieved. They were in favor of a bill, and would vote for it, giving the colored people equal accommodations for their money on all public conveyances. Several of them thought that the passage of this bill would be a firebrand thrown among the people of the State, and that the result would be felt in the next election, as, if the disfranchising clauses in the con-thought that the passage of this bill would be a firebrand thrown among the people of the State, and that the result would be felt in the next election, as, if the disfranchising clauses in the constitution were done away with, the republicans would stand a bad show in the next campaign unless they legislated wisely. The democrats, as a body, were against the bill.

An incident occurred on Thursday, evening which, doubtless, had more or less influence on the result. Furbush, a colored member of the House, went into a restaurant under the Metropeiltan Hotel and called for something to cat. The waiter told him to come back in an hour or so and he would have it ready. Furbush, thinking that this was equivalent to refusing him, got into an altercation with the waiter and struck him; subsequently, on the proprietor appearing, he made a lunge at him, and, missing him, ran his fist into a stone wail. The result was Mr. Furbush was arrested and brought before a police justice the next morning and fined $75 for his amusement.

It was estimated by lobbyists that the bill would pass by one vote, but two of the members who had declared their intention of not voting were induced to do so and voted against the bill. The vote stood 37 for and 33 against.

A new bill will probably be brought up this week, free from the obnoxious clauses, and will pass. The colored members were very much disappointed in some of their republican friends who voted against the bill, and gave free rein to their indignation on the floor of the House. They also told the democrats before the vote was taken that they would oppose every measure they brought up unless this bill passed.

AN EXTENSIVE FAILURE IN PITTSEURG.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 21, 1873.

The fact of the financial embarrassments of the firm of Wood, Sons & Co., extensive Iron manufacturers, has been a prominent topic of conversation in business circles for some days, but it was not thought that their complications were so serious as to compel them to make an arrangement at as early a date as to-day. It appears that the firm had a number of extensive contracts for railroad iron, and in payment therefor were satisfied with notes with unusually long time to run—so long, in-deed, that the banks declined to discount the pa-This action brought about a crisis, for a few days ago a considerable amount of the paper of the firm went to protest, and their business consequently was interrupted. The total estimate of the liabilities of the firm has not been estimate of the liabilities of the firm has not been precisely ascertained, but the supposition is that they will reach $2,250,000. The paper which they have in their possession foots up to semething over one million eight hundred thousand dollars, and their other debts to over four hundred thousand dollars. The assets of the company are alleged to be ample to cover all liabilities. The firm own some very valuable property, consisting of four blast lurnaces, a rolling and rail mill at Wheatland station, on the Pittsburg and Erie Raifroad; the Eagle Iron Works, in South Pittsburg, a vast concern, which, together with the stock, &c., are valued in the aggregate at $3,500,000.

It is also understood that the firm have at their Wheatland works something like four hundred thousand tons of manufactured rails, contracted for by Colonel Tom Scott for the Texas Pacific Railread. This iron is ready for shipment and was to be paid for in cash on delivery, but the number of cars necessary to move such an immense amount of iron could not be procured, and, in consequence, assisted in forcing the firm to a suspension. It is also stated that the Terre Haute Railroad Company is indebted to this concern in the sum of £200,000, which is now due and remains unpaid. Not long since they sold to Messrs, Lewis, Olliver & Phillips a belt manufactory for the sum of £10,000, which is now due and remains unpaid. Not long since they sold to Messrs, Lewis, Olliver & Phillips a belt manufactory for the sum of £10,000, and they have on hand stock valued at $40,000.

A meeting of the creditors was held yesterday, and another meeting took place this morning; but one hand stock valued at $40,000.

A meeting of the creditors was held yesterday, and another meeting took place this morning; but no satisfactory arrangement was made. The firm ask an extension of two years; but this was not agreed to, and there was an adjournment of the creditors (many of them being Eastern men) until next week, when the differences, no douct, will be adjusted. The bu precisely ascertained, but the supposition is that

A MUEDER TEAT WORT "OUT."

Chicago's Last and Bloodiest Mystery-A Man Found Brained in the Street at Midnight

CHICAGO, III., Feb. 20, 1873. On horror's head are horrors accumulating. Chicago always has been jealous of New York and has emulated her persistently in every branch. Of late Chicago's competition has been conuned to the murder trade, and our weekly record of murders committed, murderers convicted and executions stayed is well worthy of the metropolis itself. Rafferty has just been sentenced at Waukegan to be hanged on March 7. George Driver, the wife mur-derer, has been sentenced to be hanged on the 14th. At Galesburg, Osborne's life has been declared for feited for a treble crime—outrage, robbery and murder, of a character atrocious beyond even the average of this atrocious time.

By way of contrast with these crimes wherein discovery has closely followed perpetration and, in turn, has been waited upon nearly by conviction and sentence if not punishment, all Chicago is ring-a murder in which the completeness of the murderer's bloody work is only equalled by the impenetrable secreey in which he has enshrouded himself since its commission. Had poor Kennally been the prey of flends of the air, who, after beating out his life, had dung his mangled body into the alley where it was found, it would have been impossible for more utter ignorance to be displayed as to the manner, time and agency of his death. On the night of Sunday, the 9th instant, two officers on duty on Kenzie street saw, about midnight, a man running towards them, laboring apparently un-man running towards them, informing apparently under great excitement. On being asked what was the matter he replied that an unknown man was dying in the street, in front of the saloon at 35, and that a physician was wanted. Arriving at the place indicated the officers found a crowd collected around the prostrate form. The scene was in an alley at the rear of a saloon kept by a man named Callaghan. At the foot of a short flight of steps lay the man, his head in a pool of blood and mud, alive, but barely alive. No one present could identify him. The keeper of the saloon came hurriedly upon the scene in a few moments, and asked what was up. On being told that a man was fused, but was ultimately induced by the officers to open his doors. On bringing the body to the light, eight or thirty years. The vest was unbuttoned, the buttons in the shirt bosom were torn out, the collar and necktie were torn away, the hands were clenched rigidly and glued with congealed blood. All gave evidence of a fearful struggle for life. How that struggie had terminated needed but one glance at the victim's head to tell. The face was covered with blood, which had oozed from the ears, eyes, mouth and nostrils. The lips were open covered with blood, which had oozed from the ears, eyes, mouth and nostrils. The lips were open and the eyes set in a stony stare. On the left side of the head, above the ear, was a wound of so terrible a character that it left room for wonder and doubt wasther it had been infleted by the hand of man. Subsequent medical examination showed that the skull had been fractured from the lower portion of the parietal bone, down through the temporal bone, through the ear and across the base of the brain to the right ear. The brain was congested and inflamed, and the unhappy man's brains where odding promises the same of the brain to the right ear. The brain was congested and inflamed, and the unhappy man's brains where odding promises the crushing blow had fallen, and the sutures, for nearly three inches, had been started apart like the seams of a shipwrecked vessel! On the steps of the saloon near which he lay were dark gouts of blood, and a beer keg at the bottom bore the dreadful imprint of a bloody hand, which the victim had evidently outstretched to save himself. The pool of blood where his maimed head had him was about an incain depth with an area of eighteen inches. The officers had the man in Callaghan's saloon and wiped away the blood which concealed his leatures, when Callaghan exclaimed that he knew the man, that it was his cousin, John Kennally, who lived on Brewer street. When the patroimen suggested that his riends should be sent for Callaghan objected that it was hardly worth alarming them and appeared very anxious to hush matters up. Finally Kennally having lain until that time without moving a muscle or giving any signs of life or consciousness of pain. Of course the police were at once set to wo k on what, at first, seemed an easy task, as it would have been naturally concluded that Kennally had been kiled in Callaghan's saloon and tuen fung out into the street, or that the murder had been perpetrated so near that place that evidence as to its perpetration and author would easily be forthcoming. How d

and leather establishment, whose proprietors gave him an excelient character for steadiness. He carned good wages and had some money out at interest. This fact, at first, led to the supposition that he had been murdered for his money, a supposition speedily rendered untenable by the discovery of some money in his pocket. On further investigation it was found that kennally had been at Caliaghan's saloon during the Sunday. There, probably, he got into a quarrel with some Bridgeport roughs, as an officer at the railroad depot from which the whole party went on a railroad train to a funeral, heard them say they would go back after the funeral and fight it out. As to Kennally's condition, Caliaghan first said that he had only drank some pop; then, contradicting himself, that he had taken several drinks of whiskey, so that, when last seen, about half-past six in the evening, he was drunk and quarrelsome. Caliaghan strenuously-denied any knowledge of Kennally's whereabouts from that hour till his body was picked up. His saloon, he said, was closed at about seven o'clock, though the evidence of other witnesses showed that it had been open after nine, and full of customers, several of whom were drunk. He knew of no disturbance in his saloon or the vicinity except when, on Suaday alternoon, he had put out some customers who had been disputing about the cost of some drinks. The impression made by Caliaghan's evidence was net favorable to him, especially when the character of his kouse was taken into consideration. The officer on the beat examined the aliey at eight o'clock, and again at ten on Sunday night, but found no signs of a body lying there. The barkeeper swore that he closed the saloon about eight He was drunk, and so didn't know anything about anything. Kennally had been at the saloon and had drank some whiskey, but was engaged in no quarrel.
